2022 Newsletter “Supplement” #22-3 (10/7/22)

Subject: Maps

If you have an interest in maps you might find the following information and resources useful. We have seen some very unique maps come through the gallery for framing.

There is an International Map Collectors Society (IMCoS). It is a society of people of all ages who love antique and vintage maps. They are a group of collectors, dealers, librarians, academics, and just plain enthusiasts who share their common interest through meeting each other and exchanging information through a quarterly Journal.

<https://www.imcos.org/about-us/>

Members of the society live in many different countries, and the society has organized events on all five continents through its network of international representatives.

The Society supports the study of cartographic history by contributing to lecture programs and research projects. IMCoS has its share of experts, but the great majority of the members belong because they like maps, want to learn more about them, and enjoy talking to other enthusiasts who have a similar interest.

Despite being based in the United Kingdom, wherever you are in the world there's likely to be an IMCoS representative close by. The society has a National Representative in many countries. The representative for the United States is located in Chicago. The society is essentially a friendly, informal and non-commercial group linked through the IMCoS international network. This means there's bound to be someone who can offer help and advice on any specialist aspect of maps, whatever your particular interest, or simply on map collecting in general. Some of the societies' members have been collectors for over forty years, including some celebrated scholars, while others have only recently become interested. On the following pages you will find sources for maps of all kinds.
